EDITORIAL.

IN the midst of the bustle attendant upon the opening of what promises to be the most prosperous year of the University's existence, we cannot lose sight of the fact that many familiar faces among the instructors are missing. Both the Faculty and the undergraduates must feel that the University has been particularly unfortunate in this respect this year, as a number of those whom the new year does not find with us are men who have been known to many classes as able and faithful instructors who have had deeply at heart the welfare of Lehigh and of Lehigh men. Such men we can ill afford to lose, and while congratulating them on their well-earned promotions and hoping that every success may attend them in the new fields of labor, THE BURR cannot but regret deeply their departure.

WE are glad to see that the banners which the graduated classes have left with their Alma Mater, and which were until very lately hanging upon the walls of Christmas Hall, have been removed to the chapel. Suggesting, as they do, memories of men who have long since gone from the University and of the regard and esteem of these former students for their Alma Mater, these class banners can find no more fitting resting place than in the sacred quiet of the college chapel. In Christmas Hall they were very imperfectly preserved and some of the first banners sadly show the ravages of Old Father Time. We trust that, situated as they are, they may better last through the coming years, and that an "old man" returning to Lehigh, finding much that is changed, and places that are new and strange, perhaps, may still be able to point out with pride the banner of his old class.

SUSPICION is the canker worm in the wide domain known as the field of sport. In this way a writer for the Philadelphia Press begins an article on college professionalism. It is certainly time a halt is called on certain institutions who claim to have only legitimate players on their teams and yet who year after year fill up the most important places with players who either have no connection with the college from which they claim to get their title of collegians or else are professionals in the strictest sense of the word. That such a protest should come from Philadelphia is rather surprising and we hope the institution across the Schuylkill will take heed of the timely advice. It is a little difficult to obtain professional foot-ball players and we hope by the time the trees begin to bloom again the U. of P. will have purged itself and will put a strictly collegiate base-ball team in the field. As the editorial goes on to say, one sport after another has been either killed or injured by the inroads of professionalism and like troubles. Let it not be so with college athletics. Let each collegian think it his duty to frown on crooked ways, and one hundred years from now the foot-ball, base-ball and lacrosse fields will be as popular as they are today.

IT has been periodically urged by British journals, loth to credit the growing breadth and virility of American educational institutions, that the influences surrounding the latter have a tendency to effeminate their offspring. That such is not the truth has been repeatedly evinced by the high standing taken in our broad commonwealth by a very fair average number of college graduates. The general trend of college events is not such as habitually to concentrate public attention upon them or the actors. Thus it is that it generally remains for the future life to demonstrate in a public way the sterner stuff with which the learned centres are strengthening the republic. During the last summer, however, a man who had not completed his preparation for life's ins and outs, but, pursuing his collegiate course with credit to himself and the institution of which he was a loved and honored member, gave his all in what proved to be a fruitless effort to save the life of one who had not the slightest claims upon him. Frederick Brokaw's sacrifice is something to which humanity will ever point with pride, a name that will never dim. Though the sad story of the drowning at Elberon is not being told on all sides as it was at the time of its occurrence, yet the influence of Frederick Brokaw's life and death will ever be an incentive to higher aims and ambitions and establish them among those college men with whom he spent the best years of his short career.

WITH this number of THE BURR we greet the returning men and welcome the new ones with a decided change in the character of the paper. It is an improvement which has been for a long time under advisement and we feel assured of our success in carrying on the undertaking, at the same time urging the college to help us with their hearty support.

Of the change in appearance it will not be necessary to speak, as it is apparent to all; but we desire to call attention to the fact that hereafter it is our intention to issue THE BURR every ten days in place of bi-weekly, as has been customary. This will furnish the University with fresher news and will, we hope, make the paper more eminently a college newspaper. At least such is the purpose of the Board. To do this, however, will necessitate both greater work and greater expense. We therefore call upon the students to send us all matter which may be of general interest, either in the shape of communications or otherwise. Incidentally, we trust that everybody will be prompt in his payment of one dollar and seventy-five cents. Every member of the Freshman class is supplied with the first number and we would remind them that it is a college organization and as such deserves their support. If we are successful in this venture we shall feel that we have done our share in keeping pace with the University's progress and paved the way to even greater improvement.

WITH the advent of the Fall term comes to a good many of us the thoughts and speculations concerning the success or failure of the foot-ball season, and though the term is in its infancy we think that a few words regarding the eleven would not be out of place. We have been on the field regularly and have noticed with pleasure the number of men out, and the earnestness and dispatch with which Captain Blunt has started his men to work and the way in which he has set about to develop the material at his command. We especially urge all the new men who take an interest in the game to come out and strive in every way to develop the athletic material in their class, thus aiding the captain in his efforts. The eleven has only played a few games and of course no correct estimate of the playing abilities can be made, yet we think we may speak of the faults most apparent. The eleven appears to be light and in consequence more open to the vigorous attack play. To obviate this, which is not a fault but a misfortune, the men must strive to play as a unit, realizing that eleven men acting as one can do a vast deal more good than these same eleven men each following out some line of his own. The most glaring fault we have noticed is the tendency to allow one or two men to go with the man who has the ball, while the remainder of the team develop into spectators, and though hoping for the success of the play do not help in its advancement as they should. Another fault noticed is the way in which the men get rattled, and a heedlessness in obeying the signals. The signals should be studied faithfully so that each and every man may be fully able to understand what is to happen and be prepared to aid in every play, appreciating that the effectiveness is in direct proportion to the number of men engaged in it. We hope that with the coaching the team will receive these faults will be eradicated, and that the team will develop a style of play which will enable us to record numerous victories over our rivals in the field.

A WOMAN'S CHARACTER.

HAROLD HUNT was a queer fellow and queer in more ways than one. Everybody knew him and everybody liked him, and yet there was something about him affecting people which in some cases almost amounted to awe. He was bright, but turned his talents to very poor advantage. The better part of his time was taken up in soliloquizing and arguing with his friends on all manner of subjects. His pet topic of conversation was women and his views on the subject of their mission, treatment and the advantage to be gained from association with them some people thought erratic. He thought that women could be raised to any set level of the men with whom they were thrown in contact, were they but sincere. The prime element of what a man's conduct toward them should be he thought truth, then modesty, reverence and pity. It should be said right here to his credit that he practiced to the letter what he preached. The girls that did not know him called him a crank, but those that did couldn't find words to express their appreciation of his rare qualities. He never said anything to them that he did not mean; never volunteered his services to a woman he cared nothing for without giving her pretty well to understand how he looked upon her for fear she might misinterpret the object of his services. When introduced to a girl at a ball, unless he had some good reason for thinking that he was going to like her, he never asked for a dance lest she should imagine things which were not strictly so. Carrying this out, as he did, to the minutest detail, it became an inseparable part of his being and in time became his chief characteristic. He could not understand the fast and loose conduct toward women on the part of his fellow-men which he saw on every side. It at last became his one aim in life to bring his friends over to his way of thinking. To make them to raise womanhood, instead of trying to sink it; to be sincere instead of facile, and to be merciful instead of hard-hearted.

But Harold Hunt has changed. Today he is a cynic of the most pronounced type. As soon as a woman's name is mentioned he closes up like a clam. In fact the change was so sudden and complete that everybody began to talk and poor Harold was the subject of a hundred conversations. They all wondered what the cause of the transformation was.

One thought the girl that lived in the little brick house on the corner had repulsed him, another thought it was somebody else and still others held that he had changed his views on fuller observation and was too proud to acknowledge his having been deceived.

Finally the story came out. He had been deceived, and most completely. He had dropped into St. Luke's one Maunday Thursday evening to enjoy the music. The streets around the plaza on which the cathedral was built were rivers of water. It had rained all day and now between the strains of the solemn Holy Week music could be heard the incessant clatter of falling hail and the dull rumbling sound of distant thunder. When the service was about half over Harold stepped out onto the porch of the cathedral and was buttoning up his great coat when a beautiful woman of about twenty summers rushed up to him and gasped out a story of how her sister had fainted in church and implored him to help her in bringing aid to her. She added that her sister had something the matter with her heart which might cause her demise at any moment. The speaker showed refinement in every line of her face, her voice was musical and over and above all she possessed a charming way which seemed ideal to Harold. Of course he would help her in every way possible. At first he thought he was doing this for mere humanitarian reasons but a little later he began to think that the personality of the young woman who had implored him for assistance might have at least something to do with the extreme interest he took in the case. Later on he came to the conclusion that it had everything to do with it. He called a cab and together they drove for several blocks to an apothecary shop where the desired remedy was obtained.

Both to and from the drug store Harold talked incessantly and the way in which his fair companion answered completely took his heart by storm. He had found out the damsel's name, where she lived, had been asked to call and saw streaming through what was before the uninteresting vista of the future, a life fraught with all that was pleasant. At last they reached the church. Harold remarked that it seemed but a moment since they had left and the young woman smiled her approbation. He told her he would wait until she returned lest there might be something else he could do for her. He waited and he waited and he kept on waiting. Then the immense congregation began to file out. He was just the pink of expectation. Every man, woman or child that appeared under the great cathedral doorway he thought might be she. He stood there immovable for fully half an hour when he saw the beadle come and lock the door. He made all manner of excuses for tardiness. Perhaps she had not heard him say that he would wait and had gone out another way. He walked slowly down the street and up a side street to the club. He put his hands in his pockets and missed his keys, he felt for his wallet and it was gone, he had no change in his purse, in fact that had been taken and the pockets of his overcoat were turned inside out. It all came to him like a flash, that this woman whom he had thought an angel was a devil in disguise. That instead of having made the acquaintance of a wee charming girl, he had been hoodwinked by a thief and a pickpocket.

And this was what caused the great change in Harold Hunt. Women no longer bear a charm for him and he has joined that great army of men who leave them studiously alone because they can see nothing true or sincere in them.

FOOT BALL SCHEDULE.

THE foot-ball management has been active during the summer vacation, and even thus early in the college year the most important games have been arranged. As may be seen by the following schedule a num-

THE GOSSIP.

WHEN old Father Time takes hold of a summer vacation he rushes it along at lightning speed. He has no pity for the overworked student. He brings him back when there is the least desire to return. Last night we were here; this morning we are here again. Yet between the evening and the morning three months have passed away, and we awake to stern realities with a vivid recollection of a pleasant dream.

The Gossip is glad to return to the familiar scenes. He takes pleasure in seeing his old friends, and in hoping that he may make many new ones among the multitude of new faces he sees about him. He warns every one, however, that, like all true and able editors, he feels himself infallible, and interfering in all matters either of a public or private nature. He is a critic and knows that every opinion he may advance will be correct, and though he may be questioned, contradicted, or even controverted, he is loath to revoke that which his discerning mind has told him is right. With these words by way of greeting and a warning, the Gossip sits down to seek what his mighty pen can devour.

About the first object which attracted my attention when I entered the University park was a small poster entitled "A Warning." It was a notice signed by the Sophomores forbidding the Freshmen wearing the college colors before Founder's Day. Aside from the fact that I do not consider it becoming in a Freshman to make himself too conspicuous in college affairs, I could not help but question the justice of this injunction. It seems to me that the Freshmen form a considerable part of the body of students and for that reason should be allowed to identify themselves with the college. However, '94 has made a bold move and it is now their self-enforced duty to compel compliance to their resolution.

I saw our genial foot-ball manager stand at the foot of the stairway in Packer Hall soliciting subscriptions from the students. It was not an unusual sight for me, but it was with considerable amusement that I watched the various attempts to escape his vigilance. Some were so intently studying the announcements on the bulletin board that they failed entirely to hear his entreaty, while others sought means of escape by a hasty exit. The unsuspecting Freshman, after being duly convinced that it was not a trick of the Sophomores, usually promised to pay. It is hoped that the college will support the team liberally this year. The management has engaged a competent trainer in Mr. Woodruff and must of necessity be subject to considerable expense, and though several valuable men have left, nevertheless, out of the large number of men practising, it is expected that the vacancies can be creditably filled and that a good showing can be made this fall.

One afternoon I strolled up to the top of the hill in the neighborhood of Packer Hall, which commands such a beautiful view of the park. I dropped down upon the terrace and under the influence of a warm and genial sun soon felt myself given to the indolence of the season so well fitted to inspire. Every one who is blessed with a little of this delicious languor of disposition which delights in repose must have experienced among fairy scenes and visions enjoyment which the pen never can describe. It was so with me this fine autumn afternoon. The lulling roar of a multitude of dynamos from the new Physical Laboratory produced a soothing effect upon my nerves. I saw with a feeling of pride the grand edifice. The stately tower five hundred feet high cast a glowering shadow upon the side of the mountain and frowned down upon busy students that were entering and reëntering the massive doors. I sighed to think that I never would be required to obtain knowledge from within its walls.

Now that the electric railway is established between Bethlehem and Allentown, I expect to see the students avail themselves of this mode of transportation to the peanut metropolis. It is not only a "cheap" route—to use Sol. Fry's expression—but convenient, and affords a very pleasant trip with excellent opportunities of obtaining a beautiful view of the celebrated Allentown Pike. The State Fair will be held in town this year, and this same electric road will enable us to examine the various industries of the State of Pennsylvania with but very little exercise of pedestrian power.

* * *

I notice, too, a somewhat important change in the civil course (with apologies to that department). The University authorities have seen fit to remove the invitation to the brewery by taking away the steps leading to it from the campus and sealing that portion of the fence. Evidently they think that the spot has been sufficiently surveyed, and I rather think they are right; for certainly no more common springtime sight has there been for years than that of a few instruments carefully placed against the inside of that fence while the corps was enjoying itself "out of sight." I wonder if the change will greatly affect Herr Rennig's trade, and I wonder, too, how long the pickets will remain intact.

GENERAL NEWS.

ALUMNI LUNCHEON.

ALUMNI DAY of this year saw gathered the largest aggregation of Lehigh men that has ever been brought together. The celebration was inaugurated by a banquet in the gymnasium at high noon. The arrangements had been made by the Executive Committee of the Alumni Association and were carried out faultlessly. When the feasting had been finished Dr. Lamberton was called upon for a speech and responded by drawing a comparison between Lehigh of twenty-five years ago and Lehigh of today. He was followed by Dr. Coppée, who made a series of remarks, which were, as usual, received with round after round of applause. H. Stanley Goodwin, one of the trustees of the University, who is also Burgess of South Bethlehem, talked most enthusiastically on Lehigh and Lehigh men and said that if at any time he could use his municipal position to aid the students in obtaining fair treatment at the hands of the scions of the law he would be only too glad of the opportunity. Robert H. Sayre referred to his having been one of the institution's first trustees and that since the first day he took hold of the reins his allegiance had never faltered. Miles Rock was called. The enthusiasm was boundless. He was a member of the first class, that of '69, and has achieved a reputation that is second to none on our alumni rolls. He alluded to his impressions of Bethlehem as compared with those he formed twenty-five years ago, and expressed gratification at the wonderful strides Lehigh had taken in all her departments.

Among the other speakers were Dr. Ringer, Dr. Chandler, Professor Doolittle, W. H. Sayre and George Jenkins. Those seated around the table were Miles Rock, '69; W. R. Butler, George Jenkins, '70; F. L. Clerc, W. H. McCarthy, '71; W. T. Hartshorne, '74; A. E. Meaker, E. H. Williams, '75; Wm. Griffith, R. W. Mahon, C. L. Taylor, '76; Charles Bull, '78; F. P. Spalding, B. R. Van Kirk, '80; T. M. Warriner, '90; In addition to these there were a number of men who never graduated but were present at the lunch as the guests of the Association.

ALUMNI MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Alumni Association was held in the large lecture room of the Laboratory on the sixteenth of June with President Jenkins in the chair. After some preliminary business the proposed amendments to the constitution were taken up. Article I, Section 2, was amended so as to read that every graduate of the University shall by virtue of his diploma be a member of the Association, provided that no man be eligible for office until all dues are paid up to date. Students who never received diplomas can be elected associate members after having their names presented by two members. Three black balls, however, will debar any candidate from associate membership. The treasurer's report showed the expenses of the year to have been $258.92 and the balance on hand $428.98. Prof. Williams made a motion that a fund be raised to establish first, second and third prizes in composition for the two lower classes. After considerable discussion a committee was appointed to raise the money and report at the meeting next June. After the election of the following officers the meeting adjourned: President, R. P. Linderman, '84; vice-presidents, William Griffith, '76, and H. A. Bonzano, '88; honorary alumnus trustee, C. L. Taylor, '76; and executive committee, H. H. Stoek, R. P. Linderman and C. L. Taylor, reëlected.

OPENING EXERCISES.

THE opening exercises of the twenty-sixth year of the University were held in the chapel at half-past three o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, September 9th. There was an unusually large attendance of students and applicants for admission, as well as members of the faculty, instructors and townspeople. Hymn 190 having been sung and brief prayers said, President Lambertson delivered the opening address to the students. After a few words of welcome to all and happily worded congratulations to the several classes upon their newly acquired dignities and privileges, the speaker called attention to the auspicious opening of the second quarter century of the University's career and announced that the new Freshman class was by far the largest ever entering. 183 had been admitted and of the number 102 were unconditioned. A little timely advice and caution in regard to matters which would naturally present themselves at the beginning of the college year closed the address. The three upper classes were then dismissed and the list of those admitted was read to the applicants for admission.

FACULTY CHANGES.

THE changes in the corps of instructors have been unusually numerous this fall. They are as follows:

Department of English: Prosser H. Frye, M. A., instructor in English, vice H. M. Belden, resigned.

Department of Modern Languages: Robt. Ferguson, B. A., instructor in French and German, vice F. DeHaan, resigned.

Department of Mechanical Engineering: Karl P. Dahlstrom (Royal School of Technology, Stockholm), instructor, vice J. F. Flat-her, resigned. Charles F. Weil, M. E., in-structor, vice L. P. Breckenridge, resigned.

Department of Chemistry: Paul J. Dash-iel, Ph. D., instructor in Organic Chemistry and Microscopy, vice Geo. M. Richardson, resigned. M. D. Sohon, A. C., instructor in Qualitative Analysis and Assaying, vice E. A. Congdon, resigned. Frederick Fox, Jr., Ph. D., instructor in Quantitative Analysis, vice L. R. Lenox, resigned.

Department of Physics and Electrical En-gineering: Burton E. Murr, B. A., instructor in Physics, vice R. O. Heinrichs, resigned.

Department of Civil Engineering: J. E. Ostrander, C. E., instructor in Civil Engineer-ing, vice J. F. Merkle, resigned.

THE FRESHMAN CLASS.

ALTHOUGH extremely early in the term to give any absolute estimate of the formation of the classes for the ensuing year, we are able to publish below a list, as nearly accurate as it was possible to make it, of the entering class. Not only is this by far the larg-est class which has ever entered, but the num-ber of men in college is well in advance of what it has been.

The year opened with six fifth-year men, sixty-eight seniors, eighty-nine juniors, one hundred and sixty-one sophomores and one hundred and ninety-one freshmen; making a grand total of five hundred and fifteen. These numbers take into account neither any that have returned to take post-graduate courses, nor those who have lately been dropped from their class rolls.

—Mr. S. [in Lithology.] "Mr. Case, what does a white rock indicate?"

G. P. Case, '92. "Absence of coloring matter, sir."

—The Chi Phi fraternity has removed to Brodhead Avenue, near Fourth Street, and their former residence is now occupied by the Beta Theta Pi's.

—C. T. Mosman, '92, has been appointed captain of the "scrub" foot-ball team.

—Student, (to new instructor).—"Is this Mr. Q., sir?" N. I.—"No, sir! This is Doctor Q., sir!"

—W. A. Wilbur, '85, and E. M. McIlvain, '85, gave an all-day reception at the Sigma Phi House on the fourth of July. The invitations were in the shape of large posters headed by a huge cannon cracker. A jolly time was had from nine in the morning until four the next morning.

—The first rush between '94 and '95 took place on the Brodhead lot near the triangle in South Bethlehem during the evening of September 12. About two-thirds of the freshmen carrying a cane marched across the old bridge to the Eagle Hotel and returned to the South Bethlehem side, when they were attacked by the Sophomores. The freshmen were inexperienced and lost courage, thus affording the sophomores a comparatively easy victory.

EDITORS' TABLE.

"HELLO," said the Poet indefinitely as he entered the Sanctum a few evenings ago. "Hello, how are you?" replied the Lamp, starting suddenly into wakefulness and rubbing its chimney sleepily; "when did you get back?"

The spider, whose vacation's work had been ruthlessly destroyed by the Lamp's thoughtless action, glared at the offender and crawled indignantly down the table leg and out at the door.

"Just today," replied the Poet, "but what have you been doing, you are not looking well?"

"I'm not," said the Lamp. "I've been feeling pretty dusty during the summer. I have become morbid. Why, do you know sometimes I've thought that I am cracked in the globe? Queer idea, isn't it?"

"Nonsense," exclaimed the Poet cheerfully, but at the same time glancing at that portion of the Lamp's anatomy with some anxiety; "your globe is all right, and as for that dusty feeling, I'll soon fix that," and he proceeded to polish the Lamp vigorously. "There," he exclaimed as he finished, "how do you feel now?" "Ever so much brighter, thank you," exclaimed the Lamp fairly beaming with delight, "quite wick-ed in fact." The Lamp became quite gay and began conversing in its smooth, oily manner, relating the gossip to its delighted listener, the best jokes, the latest town notes, the choicest bits of scandal.

"I like to listen to you," said the Poet;

"you talk so brilliantly and your conversation fairly sparkles with wit."

"I suppose I am too garrulous," said the Lamp, "but I enjoy talking and I don't believe in hiding my light under a bushel; I always have had an ambition to shine in the very best society."

"I've been moving around considerably in the early part of the summer. I visited our Janitor's house for a week or so and then attended a very swell reception. I flatter myself I was at my best there, I fairly outshone everybody else. I was really in great demand after that. Why these heavy political dinners and banquets weren't considered successful unless I was there to give them a lighter tone." "Indeed," said the Poet, with just a touch of sarcasm.

"Yes," said the Lamp, utterly ignoring the Poet's reproach; "yes, I think I was really a success."

"Say," continued the Lamp after a few moments silence, "not apropos of dinners and so forth, but did it ever strike you that some inanimate things seem endowed with a distinctive personality?" "Hey?" said the Poet, rather startled. "I say," repeated the Lamp, "did it ever strike you that some inanimate things seem endowed with a distinctive personality?"

"No, I can't say that it did," said the Poet vaguely. "Well, I've noticed it," said the Lamp; "now look at Packer Hall—don't it seem to you that it is a sober, staid, matronly sort of a place, as if it were the mother of a family? And then the charming way that it shelters the President's office beneath its protecting wing, just like a hen with one chicken. I suppose that office ought to be a model place because Packer Hall looks so severe and precise and frowns with such manifest displeasure on that frivolous place, the Library. And then notice the compassionate, pitying air with which the Chemical Laboratory with its one wing regards the twins, the Physical Laboratories, who have no wings at all, just the way a healthy man looks at a cripple. I think its quite a study in human nature to read the expressions on these buildings. Just see the Chapel. It stands there with a benign expression on its countenance as if wishing to embrace everybody and—why, you're asleep!"

"Why, what? Yes, I really think I was," said the Poet, suddenly awakening; "you really must excuse me, but I am so tired. I need a little fresh air. I think I shall go out. Good night." "I am going out too," said the Lamp testily; and it went out.

CLIPPING.

ON India's plains the devotee,
 Into religious fervor wrought,
 Prostrates himself before the car—
 Forsooth, he'll have his Juggernaut.
 At home the Prohibitionist,
 Who in a little snare is caught,
 Prostrates himself before the bar—
 Forsooth, he'll have his jug or naught!—Ex.

NOT TO BE.

I SHALL lie down and none will me arouse
 In the care-taking morning or the swoon
 Of the still, languorous, warm afternoon
 When by the deeper brooks the cattle browse
 Or day's suspension when the sun doth house
 His aching head beyond the ribbing dune
 In the curved ocean or the night of moon
 And falling stars—but I shall always drowse.
 Life will go on, for those who cannot choose,
 In the familiar way—the startled flame
 Of chaffing and impassioned blood suffuse
 The cheeks of men and women still they name
 Old futile questions to the life I lose,
 And getting no reply embrace their shame.
